A NOTE

FROM OSKAR EUSTIS

Dear Friends,

Elevator Repair Service (ERS), one of the most innovative theater companies of our time, has been a long-time partner with The Public Theater. Indeed, they were arguably the first artistic choice I made as an artistic director when I started in 2005.

Rinne Groff, a playwright who I deeply trust, had told me many stories of her time with ERS, and when she strongly recommended seeing their work-in-progress of a new show based on The Great Gatsby, I leapt at the opportunity to see the work at The Performing Garage in Soho.

That was the first glimpse I had of ERS. GATZ was being shown as part of the Under the Radar Festival, a new festival by my old friend Mark Russell. To say I was delighted was an understatement. By the end of the show, I was convinced that this company was everything Rinne had suggested, and more; by the following year both Under the Radar and ERS were fixtures at The Public.

Since then, ERS has presented and produced a series of unique and brilliant works here: the completed version of GATZ, one of the great performance experiences of this century; their wonderful animation of the Supreme Court, ARGUENDO; their unique take on Shakespeare's MEASURE FOR MEASURE; their riveting re-creation of the James Baldwin and William Buckley debate in BALDWIN AND BUCKLEY AT CAMBRIDGE; and now their fantastically imaginative collision with Joyce's masterwork ULYSSES.

John Collins is an artist of real seriousness and depth who wears his complexity lightly. His shows always have a puckish sense of humor, an irreverence that feels distinctly American.

ERS is also in some ways an outlier, a survivor of an era of downtown theater that has changed radically in the decades since they were founded. The Wooster Group and their brilliant leader Liz LeCompte, the work that Mabou Mines continues to champion—these companies are all reminders of a time when American culture, and New York real estate, was much more welcoming of the experimental, the non-commercial, the artists who sought not mainstream recognition, but boundary-breaking discovery on the esthetic frontier. May they be an inspiration to all theater artists who are driven by similar ideals. And may we, as a city, strive to create an environment that welcomes and nurtures such ideals.

For over 250 years, downtown Manhattan has been a beacon and a haven for those who didn't fit in elsewhere, a bohemia where artists could draw strength and inspiration from the radical acceptance they found here. Now, more than ever, we need that kind of community. Elevator Repair Service is home at The Public.

A NOTE

FROM THE DIRECTORS

This piece was born when Elevator Repair Service was asked to create a one-night-only performance based on Ulysses for Symphony Space's 2022 Bloomsday event celebrating the centenary of the book's publication. Taking on this sprawling novel, which runs over 700 pages and spans a dizzying range of literary styles, was an absurd proposition—and right up our alley. Over the past two decades of its 35-year history, ERS has developed something of an obsession with staging literature, early 20th-century novels in particular. Our best-known piece, Gatz, is a daylong presentation of The Great Gatsby that includes every word of the text.

For Ulysses we took a less completist approach, drawing selectively from each of the book's 18 episodes—using only Joyce's words but not all of them.

Although it routinely tops greatest-book lists, Ulysses has defeated many readers. Some say its reputation for difficulty is exaggerated, but the challenges are real. Exposition is minimal; generally you're dropped into a scene already in progress and left to find your bearings in the unfolding action. Thought fragments bubbling up unfiltered from the characters' minds infect the narration. Foreign languages go untranslated. Allusions to literature, philosophy, music, religion, and history abound, making some books that annotate them longer than the novel itself. There are whiplash swerves of style to contend with: one chapter, for example, is a bizarre playscript with hallucinatory stage directions; another is a long series of dryly scientific questions and answers.

Readers who find more frustration than fun in these experimentations might miss how warm and hilarious Ulysses is. Arcane references and willful obfuscations share the page with bawdy jokes, made-up sound words, popular songs, and every variety of bodily function. Like life, Ulysses contains more than the mind can easily assimilate or explain. Its affirming, all-embracing attitude finds succinct expression in the famous final word, "Yes," and in Bloom's thoughts as he leaves the cemetery in episode six:

"Plenty to see and hear and feel yet. Feel live warm beings near you. Let them sleep in their maggoty beds. They are not going to get me this innings. Warm beds: warm fullblooded life."

SYNOPSIS

A VERY BRIEF SYNOPSIS OF ULYSSES

The main action of the novel follows the wanderings and ruminations of Leopold Bloom, an ad broker, on a single day in Dublin: June 16, 1904.

He's staying out of the house to allow his wife Molly, a locally admired soprano, to begin a love affair with her concert promoter Blazes Boylan. The Blooms haven't had complete sexual intercourse since their son Rudy died in infancy eleven years ago.

Stephen Dedalus, the hero of Joyce's previous novel A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man, is also wandering around Dublin. He returned early from a stay in Paris to be present at his mother's deathbed. An avatar of Joyce himself, Stephen is a young writer with grand literary aspirations and a drinking problem. Bloom encounters Stephen late in the day and attempts to take him under his wing.

Molly appears briefly in an early chapter, persistently inhabits Bloom's thoughts, and finally commands our undivided attention in the final episode, after Bloom has crawled into bed beside her and fallen asleep in the imprint left by Boylan. Her reflections on the day and on her life end the novel in a long unpunctuated stream of free-associative thoughts.

ULYSSES is made possible, in part, with public funds from the National Endowment for the Arts, the New York State Council on the Arts with the support of the Office of the Governor and the New York State Legislature, and from the New York City Department of Cultural Affairs in partnership with the City Council.
